

Turning ideas into sentences – example and blank copy

What is the point you wish to talk about?

- Rooibos tea

What would you like to say about it?

- Does not contain vitamin C

Add the previous two points together

- Rooibos does not contain vitamin C

Does your sentence need introducing?

- Firstly, this essay will counter the argument that

Add your introduction to your sentence

- Firstly, this essay will counter the argument that rooibos tea contains vitamin C

Are there any related points you wish to add?

- High heat destroys the vitamin C
- Rooibos is high in flavanoids
- Flavanoids may have potential health benefits

Which would be the most appropriate conjunction? (and, which, but, so etc.)

- However

Complete your sentence

- Firstly, this essay will counter the argument that rooibos tea contains vitamin C. Vitamin C is destroyed at high temperatures, however Rooibos tea is high in natural flavanoids that can have potential health benefits.

Turning ideas into sentences – example and blank copy

What is the point you wish to talk about?

What would you like to say about it?

Add the previous two points together

Does your sentence need introducing?

Add your introduction to your sentence

Are there any related points you wish to add?

Which would be the most appropriate conjunction? (and, which, but, so etc.)

Complete your sentence